

Contents

Tables.....	XVII
Figures	XIX
Definitions	XXI
A Note on Romanisation	XXIII
Rules and Abbreviations for Transcription and Translation–Interviews	XXV
Introduction
1 “I believe in Buddhism and Travelling”	3
2 Who is a “Lay Buddhist”?.....	15
3 The Research Question	22
4 Methodological Considerations.....	25
The Cultural Theoretical Approach.....	25
Habitus and “Deutungsmuster” (Patterns of Meaning)	27
The Procedure of Structural Hermeneutics	29
Data Assessment	33
a) Interviewing Methodology: Narrative-biographical Interviews following F. Schütze.....	33
b) Transcription and Translation Principles	35
c) Theoretical Sampling and Research Process.....	36
Extending the Methodology beyond its Boundaries	40
The Role of Statistical Material.....	44
The Taiwan Social Change Survey (TSCS) 2004.2.....	46
The Function of the Statistical Material in Relation to Structural Hermeneutics	49
Evaluation	51
Part I
Conventional Narrative Patterns
Underlying Lay Buddhist Self-construction
5 “Buddhism” in Taiwanese Society.....	55
Karma–A Buddhist Idea in Taiwanese Society	57
Religious Self-Acknowledgement– “Buddhists” in Taiwan	59

6	Conventional Buddhists? —A First Statistical Investigation	65
	The Socio-geographical Distribution of Buddhists in Taiwan	70
7	Conventional Buddhists— Five Selected Cases under Consideration	75
7.1	Lin Yongfu—Naturally Protected by the Family and Temple Life	75
	Introductory Sequence Analysis	76
	Structural Hypothesis	82
	Further Elements.....	82
	Conclusion.....	86
	Comparison with the Statistical Findings	87
7.2	Luo Peirong—Coping with Bad Karma through Buddhist and Daoist Practices.....	89
	Introductory Sequence Analysis	89
	Structural Hypothesis	96
	Development of Personal Situation.....	96
	Development of Belief	98
	Role of Bodhisattva Guanyin.....	99
	How to Handle Bad Luck.....	103
	The Power of Gods and Buddhas	105
	“One cannot reject Daoism” – Practising as a Buddho-Daoist (Fodao shuangxiu 佛道雙修).....	105
	Conclusion.....	107
	A Comparison between Lin Yongfu and Luo Peirong.....	108
7.3	Cai Chenhao—Member of a Long-established Lay Buddhist Community.....	112
	Introductory Sequence Analysis	114
	Structural Hypothesis	116
	Final Sequence in Comparison.....	116
	Additional Markers of his Religiosity	120
	Conclusion.....	122
	Comparisons	122
7.4	Li Zhiqiang—Patron and Promotor of a Young Buddhist Monastery	125
	Introductory Sequence Analysis	126
	Structural Hypothesis	132
	A Buddhist Organisation Determined for Growth.....	133

A Short-term Monastic Stay and its Consequences.....	136
a) Buddhist Ethics for Managers.....	136
b) Buddhism and Family Life.....	138
Monasticism as Determined through Fortune-telling.....	139
Buddhism in Society: Education.....	142
Karmic Connections.....	144
Buddhist Practice?.....	145
Conclusion.....	146
Comparisons.....	149
7.5 Gu Puzhong–Intellectual Buddhist Publisher.....	152
Introductory Sequence Analysis.....	153
Structural Hypothesis.....	160
Practice.....	161
East-West Dichotomy.....	168
Ritual Practice.....	171
Inconsistencies.....	175
Conclusion.....	177
Comparisons.....	179
8 Reflections–Mental Concepts, Historical Traces, and Urbanites’ Attraction.....	183
8.1 Underlying Mental Concepts	184
“Karmic” Thinking? – Yinyuan 因緣 and the Like.....	184
Social Relations: Family, Authorities, and Monastics.....	190
Veneration– Baibai 拜拜-Religiosity?.....	192
Effects upon Daily Life: Moral (lunli 倫理), Practice (xiuxing 修行), and Miraculous (aomiao 奧妙) Happenings..	196
8.2 Five Cases–Three Historical Layers	205
Lin Yongfu–Popular Religion and Early Buddhism in Taiwan.....	205
Cai Chenhao and Gu Puzhong–Mainland’s Buddhist Modernism.....	209
Luo Peirong and Li Zhiqiang–Young Buddhist Monasteries and Engaged Buddhism.....	214
8.3 What Makes Buddhism an Attractive Choice in Urban Spaces?.....	215
The Impact of Urbanisation upon the Cases Analysed.....	215
Interactions between the Buddhist Field and Urbanisation Processes.....	217

The Statistical Decrease in the Number of Buddhist Believers.....	219
Setting out the Field of “Conventional Buddhists”.....	225

Part II

Intense Believers and Practitioners

Exploring New Options for Living a Buddhist Lay Life

9 Introduction	231
10 The Socio-cultural Situation in Urban Taiwan.....	233
The Socio-economic Landscape of Taiwan: Urbanisation and the Northern Region	233
Multicultural Diversity and Hybridisation	234
Stratification of Taiwan into Ten Regions.....	236
11 Anticipated Tendencies among Intense Believers as Exemplified through a Statistical Investigation of School-affiliating “Specifying Buddhists”	239
General Characteristics	240
Pronounced Characteristics.....	242
a) Organisational Affiliation	245
b) Individual Spiritual Practice	248
c) Spiritual and Doctrinal Orientation	249
12 Four Short Portraits of Intense and Differentiating New Forms of Belief	257
12.1 Case A: Ma Fengling–Organisational Representatives and Socially Engaged Buddhism.....	257
Biographical Sketch	257
“Traditional” and “New” Buddhism	258
Social Activation.....	260
12.2. Case B: Xu Wenhua–The Making of a Modern Buddhist Activist.....	263
Biographical Sketch	264
A Biographical Development in Three Phases	266
Four Functions of Buddhism	268
The Making of a Future Engaged Buddhist?.....	270
12.3 Ma Fengling and Xu Wenhua in Contrast	273
Social Engagement and Transnational Agents	276
12.4 Case C: Zhang Yimin–Cultural Buddhist and Family Father.....	277
Biographical Sketch	278

Reference to Daily Life	279
Meditation Practice and Monastic Life	281
A Definition of Buddhism	281
Conclusion	283
12.5 Case D: Meng Fanyi–Elite Aestheticisation and Life Design	284
Biographical Sketch	285
A “Natural” Environment	287
A Culmination of “Modern Society”	288
Life-Design and Elite Aestheticisation.....	290
Buddhist Orthodoxy?	292
12.6 Is it “Engaged Buddhism”?	292
Young Buddhist Monasteries	296
New Buddhist Movements–A Selection	298
Engaged Buddhism in Taiwan– Historical Characteristics.....	301
Are the Interviewees “Engaged Buddhists”?.....	302
Reflections
The Profile of Buddhism as a Habitus-Resource– On the Attractiveness of Denoting Oneself a Buddhist in the Urban Spaces of Taiwan
13 Religion in the City.....	309
14 Religion, Immigration, and Conversion in Taipeh	313
15 Influence of Urban Conditions on the Engagement of Interviewees in Buddhist Groups.....	321
16 The Specific Profile of “Buddhism” as a Resource and Option in Urban Taiwan.....	325
Low Entrance Barriers and Soft Switching	327
Buddhist Aspirations in a Transnational Context.....	328
17 Lay Buddhists in Contemporary China and Taiwan	331
Conclusion
18 On Being a Lay Buddhist in Contemporary Taiwan	341
Bibliography.....	347
Abstract	365

